OBJECTIVES:

Support is provided for the best interdisciplinary research paper on a topic related to aging by a GSA student member. Some examples might include how the biological aspects of aging are related to the social consequences of aging; using a theoretical perspective such as life course theory to explain various outcomes of communication and aging; or how public policy affects clinical, biological or psychological aspects of aging. Papers may be empirical or theoretical.

ELIGIBILITY

To be eligible, student papers must be primarily the work of the student (if co-authored, a letter from the other author should verify that the student had primary responsibility for the work). (swh)
