

Jewish Social Policy Action Network
presents

Ethical Choices When Medicine Can't Save Your Life
a video and panel discussion

Arthur Caplan, Ph.D., Director, Center for Bioethics,
Professor of Medical Ethics, University of Pennsylvania
Moderator

Rabbi Richard Address, Director, Department of Family
Concerns, Union for Reform Judaism

Dr. Susan Denman, Specialist in Geriatric Medicine

Prof. Barry Furrow, Director, Health Law Program, Earle
Mack School of Law, Drexel University

Dr. Michael H. Levy, Vice Chairman, Medical Oncology,
Director, Pain & Palliative Care, Fox Chase Cancer Center
Panelists

Main Line Reform Temple Beth Elohim
410 Montgomery Ave., Wynnewood

Thursday, April 14
at 7:30 pm

Admission Free
RSVP 215-635-2554

For a patient with a terminal illness, individual choices can reduce suffering and bring important comfort.

The right discussions with doctors, spiritual advisers and loved ones enable quality of life choices to be considered and implemented. The discussions can consider perspectives of personal comfort, morals and ethics, as well as personal goals.

This program examines ways to achieve those empowering yet difficult discussions within the circle of patient, professionals and family.

The Jewish Social Policy Action Network is a non-profit citizen organization for the advancement of individual rights, equality and social justice through education and activism. We support progressive programs for the improvement of healthcare. Visit our web site at www.JSPAN.org.