Overview

The novel coronavirus that causes COVID-19 infection is rapidly becoming one of the most challenging public health crises in modern history. In this global care crisis and unparalleled health emergency, nurses are the largest health care professional group providing frontline care. Nurses' pivotal role in the care and management of the novel COVID-19 comes in the year landmarked as the International Year of the Nurse. This global crisis is uncharted territory and the first of its kind for most living nurses' memory.

COVID-19 NURSING CARE: Best Practices in Oncology

This activity is designed to focus on the major areas in which the COVID-19 pandemic has impacted how nursing cancer care is delivered and experienced by patients. Participate in this live webcast and join the discussion on this fast moving subject while gaining up-to-date, practical information with immediate clinical and operational application.
